

To whom it may concern:

I am writing to highly recommend Jordan Duffey for any software engineering role that you may be considering him for. As someone who has spent over a decade working in advertising technology, been part of two very successful startups, and worked with hundreds of engineers as a product manager, Agile leader, and director of user experience, I can confidently say that Jordan is a rare talent.

I had the pleasure of working with Jordan at Pomarium, a financial startup where he made a huge impact. Unlike most new developers, Jordan came in with a full career behind him as a dentist, which gave him a unique problem solving mindset and an incredible ability to learn fast. He's adaptable, eager to explore multiple approaches, and always the first to dive in when bugs or issues arise.

One of his biggest contributions was single-handedly integrating our platform with Stripe. From researching and evaluating our options to fully implementing the solution he took complete ownership of the project. He stepped up and made my job as the product manager on the project so much easier. On top of that, he always went out of his way to document our processes, making onboarding and team collaboration much smoother for developers that were hired after him.

Jordan is the kind of developer who makes a team better. Not just with his technical skills but with his attitude, curiosity, and dedication. Any company would be lucky to have him. Please feel free to reach out if you'd like to discuss his qualifications further.

Best,

Marin Berg
CTO, Pomarium

(contact information redacted due to public posting)